American Archive of Public Broadcasting

The Library of Congress and public radio station WGBH (Boston’s NPR member station) have embarked on a project to preserve for posterity the most significant public television and radio programs of the past 60 years: The American Archive of Public Broadcasting. The American Archive will ensure that this rich source for American political, social, and cultural history and creativity will be saved and made available once again to future generations.

Since 2015, the AAPB has digitized and preserved more than 120,000 historic public television and radio programs from over 140 stations across the country, with more than half of the collection available online.

You can browse participating stations by region:
Or find content by subject:

You can browse their curated exhibits.
If you are a fan of public radio and television, this archive represents an excellent opportunity to discover new content from all over the country, or revisit classics that you may not have been able to find elsewhere. Happy hunting!